The bar chart illustrates the frequency with which people swam in Australia between 2001 and 2003.

In sum, the proportion of people who swam irregularly weekly and monthly is the highest. As for those who swam with different frequencies, the trends varied from 2001 to 2003.

Of these, the largest group was those who swam at least once a week, with an average percentage of over 25% and a peak over 35%. The percentage of people who swam one to two times a month was also high, with the lowest measurement being only 25%. At the same time, 15% to 20% of the population swam several times a week or several times a year, while only about 5% of people swam every day or never swam at all.

In 2002, there was a large increase (about 5%) in the percentage of people who swam once a week and a considerable decline (more than 5%) in the percentage of people who swam once or twice a month. During these three years, there was relatively little variation in the percentage of people who swam daily or several times a year, fluctuating only by 1 to 2%. Of the trends monitored, only the percentage of those who never swam showed a continuous downward trend throughout the course of the three years.

The pie chart compares the post-graduate activities of Computer Science majors after completing their undergraduate degree program. Meanwhile, the table displays the salaries of Computer Science graduates after five years of employment.

Overall, the vast majority of graduates work full time. And most graduates have high salaries.

According to the pie chart, that the largest proportion of Computer Science graduates are in full-time employment, at 67%. Meanwhile, the percentage of graduates who go on to pursue post-graduate study is the second highest, at 12%. Less than 10% of graduates are working part-time, unemployed, or unknown (5%, 7%, and 9%, respectively).

Based on the table, Computer Science graduates with salaries of $50,000-$99,000 are the least represented in all three occupations (software development, business management, and finance), as these workers account for less than 10%. Graduates with salaries of $150,000-199,000 make up the highest percentage (all over 40%), with software development representing the highest number of earners at 54% of this proportion. However, for the salary ranges of $100,000-$149,000 and $200,000 or more, the three sectors differ greatly, with business management accounting for 36% and finance only 12%. The finance sector has the highest percentage of graduates in the highest salary range.

The two diagrams illustrate stages of soybean growth and the production of soy milk respectively.

During the growth of soybeans, first, after the soybean seeds are put into the soil, they grow into sprouts in about 2 weeks. In the next phase, the sprouts gradually grow more leaves and produce flowers, which then gradually become pods. The process from sprout to pod takes about 4 weeks. Entering the final phase, the pods mature in 2 weeks and yield soybeans.

In the process of making soy milk, soybeans are first soaked in water for about 6 hours, and then the soaked soybeans are grounded and the raw soy milk is obtained. The ground soybean residue can be used to feed livestock. Next, the raw soy milk is heated to 180 degrees for sterilization. Finally, the soy milk is bottled and packaged.

In total, it takes 6 phases (about 8 weeks) to grow soybeans, while the soy milk production process is much faster, requiring only 4 steps.

The two maps illustrate the transformation of a seaside area, which has been developed to cater to tourists.

This seaside area is in roughly triangular in shape, with the widest part being about 200 meters. Until the reconstruction, there was only an unutilized beach on the east side. And several trees sporadically scattered throughout the region.

Following the renovation, vehicular access has been significantly improved, with a newly constructed drive leading to a reception block. Situated on the north side of the reception block is a clubhouse. The drive extends beyond the clubhouse, heading west towards a pier where guests can embark on sailing adventures. All the accommodations, consisting of 12 clusters connected by footpaths, are located to the east of the plot. However, the beach area and the trees have been left relatively unchanged.

In summary, numerous tourist facilities have been developed in this seaside area, and alongside these new establishments, a portion of the sea has been utilized.

A country's history, language and ethos are all inextricably bound up in its manufactured artefacts. If the relentless advance of international brands into every corner of the world continues, these bland packages might one day completely oust the traditional objects of a nation, which would be a loss of richness and diversity in the world, as well as the sad disappearance of the many foundations of people's characters. For example, a Japanese tea ceremony cannot be held without its specially crafted teapot, and a Fijian kava ritual cannot be carried out without its bowl made from a certain type of tree bark.

从无到有构建一篇完整雅思“大作文”（观点型）

1 举例

本要点 | 观点型“大作文”完整写作过程。

- 观点型“大作文”题目举例：

Children are the target of a large amount of advertising today. Some people believe that this should be prohibited since it may harm children.

To what extent do you agree or disagree?

· 完整范文写作：

Our life is saturated with various advertisements nowadays. However, I don't think that children should be the focus of marketing campaigns.

As a first point, I believe that advertisement can easily influence children negatively because of their immaturity. To begin with, children lack sufficient judgement, resulting in a lack of clarity about their true needs. Hence, they themselves and their parents always engage in impulsive spending, buying many items they do not need. A young boy, for instance, could be tempted by an advertising for a musical instrument and make the purchase, regardless of whether he has any interest in music. As a result, he loses interest in playing the instrument halfway. In addition, when faced with the lure of some advertisements, children may even engage in criminal behavior due to lack of self-control. In order to get the advertised product, a child may steal money from his or her parents or even steal the item from the store.

Secondly, children's healthy growth and development can be harmed by exposure to advertising. Advertising for video games is one form of marketing that can harm children. Video game advertisements promote reward mechanisms that can lull children into believing that they will be rewarded for no effort. At the same time, the killing scenes in games may also contribute to children's propensity for violence. Advertising for junk food is another form of objectionable marketing. Many children fall for advertisement for fried, high-sugar, high-salt foods. Consider a child who eats these heavily processed foods for lunch every day; his or her chances of becoming obese or even severely ill skyrocket.

To conclude, it is important to ban advertising to children since it has a negative impact on both children's behavior and the environment in which they will grow.
